CD-ROM Drop May Bring More Cash to the Neighborhood

By Michael Bush

Nonprofit Cabrini Connections, Chicago, hopes an interactive CD-ROM in its direct mailings will encourage more local businesses to join its cause in creating neighborhood infrastructures for less fortunate children.

Cabrini is not looking at this as a total departure from the mailings and programs that it has done.

“We are looking at this as an extension of what we have been doing from the start,” said David Bassill, president/CEO. “It is an easy way to deliver a complex message to a group of people that don’t have much time to sift through mail. Instead of delivering the message in fragmented pieces, this wraps it all into one flowing piece in which the user can stop, go back, speed ahead or repeat any part of it they want to.”

Because of money restrictions, Cabrini will only be able to distribute a little more than 1,000 pieces for this mailing, but if this campaign is able to generate enough revenue, it will make the next campaign much larger.

For Lightfall Interactive, Evanston, IL, a business communications solutions developer and the creator of the CD-ROM being used by Cabrini, this marks the first time it has developed a CD for a nonprofit group.

“We usually create these CDs for corporations who are looking to teach their workers or consumers how to use something,” said David Golder, founder of Lightfall Interactive. “We chose it because it was a charity in our neighborhood that needs our help and it’s a case that directly affects our community.”

Close to 90 percent of the CDs will go to businesses and the rest will go to citizens in the Chicago area.

A portion of the CDs will be shipped with a Newsweek and Kaplan publication titled “How to Be a Great Mentor.” According to Bassill, businesses within this community will be affected most in the long run if the kids in the area don’t get the best possible education and succeed.

Golder said the key to making the CD effective is to not make it too long and to design it so the user is involved and in charge of what they are seeing and doing. The CD lasts 30 minutes. Cabrini drops 10 to 12 mailings a year, totaling 70,000 pieces. Its donor base consists of about 75 corporations and 800 individuals. Since the organization was launched in 1992, it has raised $1.7 million.

Spread That E-Mail

The couple who successfully distributed a database of 500,000 e-mail addresses now want to take it to the Web.

The petition, which comes on the heels of the tragedy at Columbine High School in Littleton, CO, is part of a movement to keep guns out of the hands of children.

“We sent out e-mail addresses, with the e-mail addresses only in their original database, to 700,000 people,” said Joan B. Putnam, the husband, Wes B. Putnam, who runs www.moveon.org.

Putnam said he is sure how many people opened it, but he thinks it’s still a big number.

Blades said he sent out the e-mail addresses of the petition to about 300,000 people.

She also said that the petition has unique names on it that appear on the first page.

“We are not sure who they are or what they are,” said Putnam.

For this petition, however, the names are not so unique.

“We haven’t been asking people on the petition to be very respectful of the names we are sending them,” said Putnam.

“If we are sending this to the Web, we will be starting a new petition to keep them informed.”

This list saves more than the environment.
